Alita: Battle angelo.

Alita: battle angel. Alita battle angel 2 full movie. Alita battle angel motorball song. Alita battle angel trailer. Alita battle angel netflix. Alita is a cyborg picked up from a rubbish dump below a floating city. A well-mannered doctor repairs her, gives her a new body, and she awakens with no memory of who she is and no knowledge of the world around her. I liked this a lot (yes, even a movie as terrible as this can have positives) because it meant the lead character went along with the audience learning about the extravagant world, it's history, and her own identity. We knew as much as she did. Unfortunately where this came apart was in trying to develop a world far too deep and rich for the film's runtime, and without adequately tying it to the core narrative. Exposition dumps felt forced in, and often had little bearing or pay-off.

But that was only one part of the film's script problems. The biggest one for me was it trying to combine two separate stories from the original manga. Even when haphazardly combined as they were in the movie, it was plainly obvious that the two stories were not meant to co-exist, and the film makes little effort to actually marry them together. On the one hand we have the story of Alita's awakening in a dark city full of murders, body part theft, and bounty hunters keeping the law. This was actually my favourite narrative of the whole thing, and I wish they'd doubled down on it, not least because it ties into Alita's background and specialisations naturally.

The second story they tried to shoe-horn in was a sporting event called Motorball, where cyborgs race around a track destroying each other and the winner is the last one standing or the first to score a goal with the titular motorball. Or at least I think that's how it worked, the rules of the sport were never clearly explained. Beyond being the least interesting part of the whole movie, and really just being there for some additional action sequences, the way they tried to tie it to the overall narrative was cack-handed to say the least. Everyone seems to have their fingers in bounty hunting and the Motorball, be they good guys or bad guys. Alita's love interest seems to have connections to both Alita's doctor, and the organiser (known as Vector) of the Motorball, through providing them with stolen body parts. Okay that works, but Vector is also under the thumb of Nova who seems to have a personal relation to Alita. Vector also works with the doctor's ex-wife who simultaneously works in the lab fixing Nova's criminal workers, and in the Motorball pits fixing up the contenders. If the over-coincidence of everyone knowing everyone else and all running in the same circles wasn't enough, background characters even share these insane connections; a number of bounty hunters also participate in Motorball.

And each and every one of these characters seemed to have a "massive revelation" about who they really were. Oh my god the doctor's the murderer! Oh no wait he's a bounty hunter! Oh wow he was married to that evil-looking woman who works for Vector! Oh wait she's also at the Motorball! Oh look so's Vector! Of course Hugo knows all of them. Oh and he's the guy stealing body parts, of course. And yes, obviously he has connections at the Motorball arena, who wouldn't. Every ten minutes we were meant to gape at the latest character revelation. By the time Nova takes his glasses off to reveal Edward Norton (and yet not reveal anything else about his character whatsoever) I'd had enough and just wanted to go home.

Ultimately the Motorball sequences were pointless. They had no pay-off at all. They did nothing but dilute the film in unnecessary world-building, haphazardly set-up the next film (that won't happen) with a frustrating and anti-climatic cliffhanger, and provide additional action sequences just in case anyone was getting bored with the over-rushed pacing that was trying too hard to squeeze too much in. As a result the film had no breathing room. We had no time to become attached to the characters, and the editing sliced off the ends of important scenes in order to rush through to the next exposition dump. We're at the doctors, now we're at the Motorball, now we're in the streets, now we're in a lab, now we're back at the doctors, now we're on the streets again. Cut. Cut. Cut.

And oh my god that ending. Sorry I have to go back to that diabolical ending. The film spends its runtime rushing through every point because there's so much story, worldbuilding, and background detail to fill in. By the time we get to the credits, the film still hasn't even finished the story. In fact it feels like the entire third act was cut out. The secondary villains have been dealt with, the love interest has tragically died (through stupidity and a complete lack of logic) the main villain's revealed to be Edward Norton, and then we get a timelapse as Alita works her way to becoming Champion and going up to the city to confront her foe edits. Yes, that's where the credits are. Right where the film starts to feel like it might start getting interesting, we might get some answers, and we might start to get some payoff from what's been set-up so far.

Oh there's so much more, I'm not even done yet. The dialogue is awful, the acting is terrible, the characters are shallow. Rosa Salazar did a decent job with Alita and that cringeworthy dialogue, and Mahershala Ali flits between Vector and Nova effortlessly, but Christoph Waltz and Jennifer Connolly are wasted, Rodriguez favourites Eiza Gonzalez and Jeff Fahey are little more than one-line cameos (Fahey's character was interesting, with cybernetic dogs, while Gonzalez's character was a complete waste of tural assets. Jackie Earl Haley was apparently in this movie as well. Keanu Johnson needs acting lessons, Ed Skrein was just Francis in a cybernetic body, and Jorge Lendeborg was just as annoying as he was in Bumblebee.

On the note of the visual effects, yeah okay, that was pretty decent. Any praise heaped on that is worth it for sure. Alita is almost unrecognisably CGI, with such an incredible amount of attention put into detail, lighting, animation, the whole works. That said, I don't see why she needed to be full-CGI when a simple touch-up on live-action Salazar would probably have sufficed. Her body could easily have been a bodysuit refined in post-production, her hair would've appeared a whole lot more natural, and her signature eyes could easily have been an add-on instead of the whole reason for re-rendering her entire body. Furthermore it would've reduced the uncanny valley feeling she gave off, and married her with her live-action companions much easier. The creation of the city is great; dark and dangerous, without feeling overbearing and unlivable, while the advancements in technology were a sight to behold (like a motorbike with one big wheel, or the city walls being made of pure water, or the numerous amounts of cybernetic enhancements almost everyone seemed to sport.

I could go on, but I'm just ranting. I found myself bored and uninterested within the first ten minutes of the movie, but I hoped it would improve as it went along. It didn't. It just got worse, and my sighs got louder. There's too many coincidences, too many plot holes, the romance sub-plot lacked romance, even the action scenes started to feel too hyperstylised and became boring. What's worse is that all that worldbuilding (which for once I might actually say there was too much) never had any payoff. We never get to see even glimpses of this fabled city everyone keeps talking about, the Motorball sidequests were pointless and took up far too much of the running time. Characters have no depth, their motivations make no sense, and every single one of them feels like they're in their own movie separated from everyone else. Key example here being when Alita walks into the bounty hunter bar and is told everyone looks out for themselves and compete for the bounties, to which her response is to immediately attempt a rousing speech to unite everyone against a "common" enemy that no-one else has even heard of. Of course it fails and she looks like an idiot. Yeah, they made the titular Battle Angel look like an idiot. I'm sorry, 3/10. It's only February and I feel like I've already seen the worst movie of the year. Do yourself a favour and save your time and money. Watch something else this half term.
