This has to be one of the most boring, bland, utterly exhausting films I have ever watched, and I have watched some rubbish.

The only interesting thing about this movie is the high scores and good reviews its getting. I can only assume that the fear of being called raciest out ways the duty to review truthfully. which in itself is raciest.

My flatmates didn't want to criticize this move, so when I asked them they dodged the question and said "well the special effects are good. The Matrix had good special effects. Inception had good special effects. The special effects are as boring as the rest of this really rubbish film.

It may be named after its male lead, but don't let that fool you - this is the most girl-power film since, well, Wonder Woman. Full of smart, strong ladies who kick major butt, this film is more feminist than most movies aimed at women! Not to mention the almost Shakespearean royal power struggle at the center of the plot, the well-thought-out worldbuilding that draws respectfully on African culture, the super-cool tech, the humor, the fact that all the major characters are more well-rounded than in most superhero films. This is one case where you can believe the hype! It's a pure entertainment package that delivers on every level.

The movie was 2 hours long but it never felt like it casue the story kept you engaged the whole time. The Acting was superb and really brought the characters to life and made them very memorable, I loved just about every character, they really focused on the cohesiveness of the unit as a team rather than just making it about black panther. The action scenes were fantastic and the visuals were breathtakingly stunning. The antagonist and protagonist had a meaningful perspective that was very relatable to reality and delivered a powerful message. The dialogue was great and delivered some very powerful lines. The music score was amazing as all the scenes were very fluid and really hit home.
