Clueless the musical. Clueless edits. Much like Mean Girls that would follow nine years later, Clueless has a lot more beneath its pastel coloured surface than merely High School coming of age froth. Firmly cloaked in satirical winks, Amy Heckerling's {Look Who's Talking} film is a sharp parody of the wealthy whilst cunningly observing the life essentials such as friends, family and the four letter word that is love. Told from the perspective of Cher {a delightful, pretty and breezy Alicia Silverstone} Clueless follows the Austen formula of a young girl who means to do well for others without realising she is sacrificing her own destiny. Cher is a wonderful jumble of contradictions, but in a good way. She's brainy but stupid, sophisticated but totally ignorant. She is a character that in the wrong hands could really have sank the movie's motives. So it's with great credit that Silverstone, guided by Heckerling's writing and direction, makes Cher utterly adorable in spite of her deficiencies. In fact it gives the film its strength. The ending for sure is never in doubt, but with the sharpness of tongue {the sassy teen dialect is a metaphoric joy} blending in with the air of sweetness throughout, Heckerling has crafted an alternative, modern day classic of her own.

Clueless movie clips. Clueless soundtrack. Backing up the fine work from Silverstone is the equally pretty Stacey Dash as best pal Dionne {a 30 year old playing a 15 year old. Brittany Murphy, Paul Rudd, Dan Hedaya {joyous as Cher's father} Donald Faison and Breckin Meyer. A rocking sound track helps the movie flow, and Bill Pope's photography of the California locations looks pristine in High Definition. It's a warm and intelligent picture is Clueless, far from perfect, but in itself most definitely not clueless. 7.5/10.
