The film means well. It clearly has something to say, but I fails to give anything to us in a meaningful way.

Natalie Portman gives it her all, playing a character that is losing herself and has a lot of emotional baggage. She's terrific, but sadly the rest of the film is not. Lucy in the Sky is a miscalculated mess, with so many things in it and so little as well that it's hard to remain engaged.

The movie feels empty, emotionless and very dull. The only thing of visual interest are when then the aspect ratio of the film changes throughout the film. We go from 4:3 to 16:9 and more. The screen shrinks grows and it all seems based on how our character is feeling at the time. It's interesting, but proves to be a large distraction.

The film ultimately has nothing to really offer. There's no incite, no intrigue and it's ultimately empty. Natalie Portman does her best as do the rest of the cast, but it ends up just being a failed film with good ideas executed poorly.

A Deep Dark psychological ride. Based on true events, Natalie Portman stars as astronaut Lucy Cola who comes home from a Space Mission and sort of loses her mind from Jealousy. Check out the trailer. Natalie is well supported acting wise and bet her Costume Designer is up for some awards. Really cute outfits. Lucy also has a fascination with Butterflies and Bees, they are her go to when tripping out and light up the screen in close ups. If you happen to frequent the San Diego Intl Airport like me, you'll get a surprise.
