Midsommar panic attack scene. Midsommar maypole song. It was definitely a unique experience and it stayed with me for a couple of days. It had really nice cinematography and visual effects and some decent acting. I can't say it was the most original or the bizarre movie I've ever seen. I also felt like it had the same problem Hereditary had about its overall storytelling; a little bit all over the place with underdeveloped characters.

Let me start by saying I love nearly all horror movies, including the film Hereditary that was done by the same director. I cannot describe with any combination of words in the English lexicon how terribly repulsive this film is. Throughout the movie, there are ever more traumatic scenes, and when that culminated in the main character's boyfriend being seduced in some bizarre sex ritual, I thought to myself, surely this must be the most extreme things get before someone starts explaining the significance. But no, only more grotesque things were to come.

In short, if you want to feel a divine combination of repulsive emotions that make you feel physically ill, like you've been morally assaulted, then this is the movie for you.
