MIDSOMMAR

/ directors=Ari Aster / release year=2019 / info=Traumatized and still struggling to come to terms with an appalling family tragedy, the American graduate student, Dani, turns to her self-centred and distant boyfriend, Christian, against the backdrop of an inescapable break-up. In high hopes of repairing their disintegrating relationship, Dani tags along with two of Christian's fellow students and their cryptic Swedish friend, Pelle, to attend a once-every-ninety-years summer solstice festival at an isolated pagan commune in rural Sweden. Now, for the first time in a long while, Dani feels happy; however--in this friendly and verdant haven of peace, harmony, and constant sunshine--the welcoming community's peculiar traditions start to blemish the folkloric utopia, allowing the uncomfortable feeling of uneasiness to creep up on Dani and her friends. In the eyes of the uninitiated newcomers, the naturalistic rituals seem brutal. Could a numbing truth be hiding in plain sight?

The end of the film, Dani seems totally fine with her suddenly becoming the May Queen and it seemed that it suited her, and as an addition to all of it, she seemed not to notice something is wrong with Christian. Next, she was totally carried away by her new "role" of being May Queen and she neglected Christian, and she was sicked and had to vomit when she saw Christian having sex with the girl Maja. Xcuse me? Had Dani has been next to Christian all the time, Maja could not have had taken him! But these kind of things can only happen in a film. Overall, the film is not all that scary as is presented in the trailer. Nor was "Hereditary. Actually, both of the films are very similiar: if you have watched "Hereditary" you will certainly notice the similarities. Very little blood, by the way; that is good.

I don't think I'll ever watch a more bizarre almost two and a half hours it's a bit long and drawn out but felt compelled to see what happens at the end.
