- Brief - It's 2031, seventeen years after authorities in seventy-nine countries decided collectively to combat global warming with the coolant CW-7. The result was the Earth being immediately sent into a deep freeze, killing all human life except a handful who now live on an "ark", a revolutionary train built before 2014 by a train aficionado named Wilford (Ed Harris), the train which at that time was considered useless and self-indulgent. The train is required to be constantly moving to generate energy for life inside, it which circumnavigates the globe on a single continuous track once every year. The train is still controlled in all of its aspects by Wilford, who has created three separate classes housed in different parts of the train: the privileged "one percent", who are at the front of the train, the workers who support both ends and occupy the middle of the train, and the "tail people", the masses who live at the back of the train like cattle in a windowless cattle car, they being solely fed protein bars, whose ingredients the tail people do not know. The face of Wilford's ideology to those in the tail end is Minister Mason (Tilda Swinton), as Wilford never ventures to that end of the train. Some of the policies which Wilford has implemented is taking many of the children from the tail end for an unknown purpose never to be seen by the people in the tail end again, and committing occasional indiscriminate genocide in the tail end, most of the tail people believing as a method of population control, and to demonstrate his dictatorial power in an effort to have a complacent populace amongst the masses. There have been many attempts of revolution by the tail people in the past, all quashed by Wilford. Curtis (Chris Evans), one of the tail people, wants to attempt another revolution, he believing all past attempts having failed because they have focused on Wilford, as opposed to what he feels needs to occur for power: take control of the engine at the front. Supporting Curtis in this fight are, amongst others: Gilliam (Sir John Hurt), the wise old man; Edgar (Jamie Bell), who Curtis took under his wing when he became orphaned in the early years; and Tanya (Octavia Spencer) and Andrew (Ewen Bremner), who want to find their children taken away. Along the way, they have to co-opt Namgoong Minsoo (Song Kang-ho), an addict of a synthetic hallucinogen called Kronole, he who designed the security system, namely the locking mechanism of the gates between all the train cars. As Curtis and his team try to work their way from car to car from the tail to the front, their priorities are influenced by what they see, what they learn, and by revelations including secrets from their individual pasts

Wow, this movie was great! I totally didn't know what to expect. All I knew is that it had to be a Sci-Fi film of some sort due to my Sci-Fi club wanting to go see it. I thought the action was great and the storyline probable. If we came to something like this the have and have not would definitely be delineated. Mind games and like politics now! I digress... I totally didn't know the lead was Chris Evans! He was fantastic! I love the mix of characters! You totally didn't know where the movie was going or if the main character would cave or not! My only wish is that I could have seen this at the AFI theater instead of at home! This would have been great on the big screen.

Some elements of the movie just do not make sense.

There are things that could be automated without needing any children.

No matter, if one follows the story, there is of course some well done parts.

For example, when we are showed the different parts of the train, although a bit over the top, they are catchy and do their job. For this one star.

The rest of the story is a no brainer, been there done that.

I found the ending quite funny, especially when one kid appears in a frame without a jacket and in the next one, with a fur coat..

Unfortunatly, I have seen this one in the movie theatre. If you want to watch something without thinking much; this is one of those.
