Free online avatar the last airbender. First of all, let me start off by saying that, despite the horrible reviews this film is getting, this is NOT the worst movie you'll ever see. It's not great, but it's not the second-coming-of-Ed-Wood that some people are making it out to be. Much of the hatred, I find, stems either from the anti-casters (who take issue with there not being more Asian actors in the film, which was mostly a non-issue for me) or from fans of the show who didn't like this change or that change, or people who aren't familiar with the show and to whom the plot seems silly. Not to mention the Shyamalan detractors, who are likely to subtract a few stars from their rating of a film if his name is over the title.

But, to sum up, yes, the movie was definitely a disappointment. First, the pacing is all off. It's way too rushed, especially early on. I don't know, maybe Paramount took a pair of scissors to it, not trusting the material or the audience, but it's definitely rushed. Generally, the casting was okay to me. Noah Ringer's acting was a tad awkward in places, but he did okay, considering he had no previous acting experience. He manages to portray Aang pretty accurately, and his martial arts skills are incredible. Dev Patel is one of the highlights of the film as Zuko. Jackson Rathbone did well as Sokka, but I was less impressed by Nicola Peltz as Katara. Most of the older actors did well, though the guy who played Zhao was a tad annoying sometimes (maybe he was meant to be.

One of the biggest problems I had was with how the characters were portrayed. Especially Katara and Sokka. In the show, Katara was a formidable fighter in her own right, prone to be motherly, bossy, and sometimes lovably preachy. Here she's pretty bland, though. Her basic purpose in this movie seems to be to say, You can do it, Aang! In the show, Sokka was one of the main sources of comic relief, constantly complaining and making sarcastic remarks. Though Rathbone does well with what he was given, the character, like Katara, is bland, stripped of much of his humor. The only highlight are a couple of nice scenes with Princess Yue towards the end. As for Iroh, his wise side was done well, but we saw precious little of his lazy, pleasure-loving side. Also, there is very little chemistry between the characters. There's none of the family-feel of the main group, none of the feelings Aang has for Katara, and little of the great chemistry between Zuko and Iroh. If they had made the movie longer, worked more on the pacing, and spent more time establishing the characters and their relationships, it would've worked wonders.

Even though there were flaws in the casting and acting, there wasn't much in the way of writing for the actors to work with. Shyamalan continues his recent trend of writing lazy dialogue. The sets looked pretty good (especially the southern Air Temple) but the costumes, I thought, looked cheapish; they LOOKED like costumes. Also, there was an annoying habit of mispronouncing names - it was distracting, and I can't think of any reason why they did it (couldn't have been a mistake. Also, I thought the opening of the film was cheesy. They tried to emulate the opening sequence of the show, with the silhouettes doing examples of bending in front of a red background. It worked in the show, but it seemed silly here. Also, the written introduction, a la Star Wars, didn't help either.

So yes, there's plenty not to like, but there are also some strong-points.

First, the martial arts were very well done. And the CGI looked decent as well. The music, by James Newton Howard, is impressive (what else would you expect from Howard. Also, the film got a little better towards the end, and there were moments where I actually got absorbed into it briefly. To sum up, it's not the worst movie of all time. I've seen worse films, and, despite what some people say, it has its strengths. But yes, it could've been MUCH better, too. Maybe the problem was too much studio involvement. Maybe it was just hard to compress that much material into a movie-length format. Maybe Shyamalan is just in a bad rut (we know he has talent, as his early films show. Or maybe it's some combination of all of them. It just seemed... a little lazily done. Definitely one of the more disappointing cinematic experiences I've had in years. So much potential, so little payoff.
