'The Lighthouse' ranges from artistic to avant-garde, and while some scenes push viewers towards uncomfortability, the overall merit of Robert Eggers' filmmaking isn't to be missed. Im a little jaded having just recently watched "cold skin" and "The vanishing" both "lighthouse keepers go crazy" films. That said I was very enthusiastic about this unique, and supposedly timely take, starring patterson and dafoe. Man was I bored and disappointed. The black and white 4:3 filming adds nothing to the story and feels like a gimmick. Nothing about the characters, atmosphere or pacing lends itself to that style so instead it comes off as cloying, begging you for praise. Instead of any kind of build up of tension our two leads just scream each other for 2 hours until we get an oh so tiresome violent ending I couldn't bring myself to be upset over.

I'm giving this a 5 because Dafoe and Patterson I think played their parts well, but frankly this added nothing to the genre and felt disingenuous as a mandatory high school Christmas play. Critics, I get it, you're feeling unloved because serial superhero films are in vogue again but just because something is abstract doesn't mean it should earn automatic Oscars.

The lighthouse is the worst movie of this decade. No, story, illegible dialogues, poor acting- this movie has all the ingredients to make it a horrible movie. Who thought black and white movies are a good idea? The story has no legs and it's all about a guy imagining things. I kept thinking something of going to happen in this movie but it's just plain silly. If I was forced to watch this movie again with a gun on my head, I would prefer to be shot, repeatedly.
