

Year 2019. creator Max Eggers, Robert Eggers. Genres Horror, Fantasy. Canada. description As the wavering cry of the foghorn fills the air, the taciturn former lumberjack, Ephraim Winslow, and the grizzled lighthouse keeper, Thomas Wake, set foot in a secluded and perpetually grey islet off the coast of late-19th-century New England. For the following four weeks of back-breaking work and unfavourable conditions, the tight-lipped men will have no one else for company except for each other, forced to endure irritating idiosyncrasies, bottled-up resentment, and burgeoning hatred. Then, amid bad omens, a furious and unending squall maroons the pale beacon's keepers in the already inhospitable volcanic rock, paving the way for a prolonged period of feral hunger; excruciating agony; manic isolation, and horrible booze-addled visions. Now, the eerie stranglehold of insanity tightens. Is there an escape from the wall-less prison of the mind?. Rating 8,1 of 10

Robert Eggers is one of my favorite directors working today and he succeeds in his second feature film. The Eggers' brother's writing is done expertly well leaving just enough ambiguity and direction to keep audiences invested. Of course, Robert Eggers direction and style of this film is impeccable and is lead by Oscar worthy performances out of Dafoe and Pattinson. The score and sound design is done very well and sounds like a piece of art. The cinematography is quite gorgeous in a lot of shots specifically those taking place outside but the whole film is shot well. Overall, this film is a masterpiece and competes to be my favorite film of the year.

This is Ingmar Bergman thru and thru - it starts as Through A Glass Darkly (isolated bottle setting, an island and the house on it, captured on stark, bleak, black and white) and then, through the course of the movie, as the characters booze, become perversely co-dependent and muddle together, it transforms into Persona. As a side note, following in that vein, this also heavily reminded me of the 1963 English movie The Servant. The movie itself is shot excellently, and the sound design, though at times overwhelming the picture, is used extremely efficiently, effectively enhancing the eerie tone. I wouldn't necessarily call the movie exactly boring, but I did frequently space out for seconds at a time, particularly during the very dialogue heavy scenes, so there's a good chance I may have missed crucial details, but all the more good reason to rewatch it. Also the ending, while I don't mind ambiguous endings at all, this one was a little too random - Pattinson finally reaches the lighthouse lamp, burns his hand, tumbles down the stairs, and then cut to him completely naked outside and being pecked by gulls. how'd he get there? He could've crawled out, but what happened to his clothes? Did Defoe live and do that to him? All that aside, the technical prowess far outweighs the lack of entertainment some viewers might have. The movie was refreshing to see in this era, and is both extremely unique, and a terrific throwback to European horror movies of the 50's. 60's.

Empty movie about nothing. Didn't watch until the end, in cinema. For me was a waste of time
