Summary=Lieutenant Pete "Maverick" Mitchell is an expert United States Naval Aviator. When he encounters a pair of MiGs over the Persian Gulf, his wingman is clearly outflown and freaks. On almost no fuel, Maverick is able to talk him back down to the carrier. When his wingman turns in his wings, Maverick is moved up in the standings and sent to the Top Gun Naval Flying School. There he fights the attitudes of the other pilots and an old story of his father's death in combat that killed others due to his father's error.

Maverick struggles to be the best pilot, stepping on the toes of his other students.

If you like action movies simply for the sake of the action, you'll probably enjoy this movie a lot. It is full of action (and even a bit of combat. However, if you expect at least a bit of a believable story behind all the action, in the end this movie will disappoint. In essence, there are three different stories told in this movie, and all of them either lacked suspense or believability.

The first takes up about the first three quarters of the film. Maverick (Tom Cruise) is a Navy Fighter Pilot sent to a special school for the Navy's elite pilots. To the extent that there's a story here it seems to revolve around whether Maverick or Iceman (Val Kilmer) will end up at the top of the class and win the Top Gun award (and essentially be declared the best of the best. The problem is that the competition really didn't interest me. The movie didn't really offer any particular reason to root for one over the other, and when Tom Skerrit (playing the commander of the school) offers a voice over (by radio to the pilots) saying that only 2 points separates Maverick and Iceman, my honest reaction was "who really cares? In fairness I guess kudos have to be given to the writers for avoiding the temptation to turn Iceman into the embodiment of evil, which would have made the story even more ridiculous (even though it would have given us someone to root for.) As it is, though, watching this competition between the two was a bit like watching a World Series between the Arizona Diamondbacks and the Seattle Mariners (or substitute any two teams that you don't care a whit about.)

The second storyline was about the romance between Maverick and one of his civilian instructors at the school (played by Kelly McGinnis.) The relationship wasn't sufficiently developed and just didn't strike me as believable. How did Charlie (McGillis) survive as an instructor at this school when she was so easily swept off her feet by a hot shot student (given that the only students she'd ever have at this school are hot-shots?

The final storyline was the most interesting of the three, and revolved around whether Maverick could regain his form after the accidental death of his buddy Goose (Anthony Edwards.) Again, though, there's a predictability to this. You know in the end that he'll come through. How he came around was a bit problematic to me (entertaining though it was, I admit. If the sort of thing that happened in the last little bit of the movie was really the sort of thing that might have happened during the Cold War, then it seems to me that the Cold War would have become "hot" pretty fast. This is clearly a plot line that worked very well in the 1980's, when Cold War-themed movies were common (think "Red Dawn" or even "Rocky V. although "Top Gun" is certainly less over-the-top than those two) and that historical context might be a problem when watching such a movie almost 20 years after the end of the Cold War, when the passions just aren't there anymore.

Anyway, I'd give this a 5/10. Action-lovers will love it; others might be disappointed.
