Movie you should have left with english subtitles 2016. David Koepp has had quite an odd directing career. He only does a film every 3-4 years at the most and the genre can range from extremely dark horror like 'Stir of Echoes' through to immensely light comedy like 'Mortdecai. When he does venture into the dark thriller/horror world though it appears to me that's when he's at his best. 'You Should Have Left' is a fine example of this. In less capable hands this film could have been an absolute mess. In his hands though he manages to contain the chaos and turn it into something really dark and haunting. I was a big fan of this film.

Having Kevin Bacon and Amanda Seyfried as the stars of your film helps things a lot. Neither are perhaps in the absolute top-tier of Hollywood actors, however both are very good at what they do. They are immensely watchable and even had the skills to have me forgetting I was watching a relationship with a 27 year age difference. Also Bacon is in incredibly good shape for a 60 year old it has to be said. The performance that blew me away perhaps the most though was child-actress Avery Tiiu Essex. So often I find children in movies extremely annoying and distracting. Not in this case though. She was charming, funny and never detracted from any scene.

There's something so great about contained psychological thrillers. I love that this film isn't about trying to scare you with cheap jump-scares. There was one early in the film and I thought, oh no here we go, but after that the film settled down and was content to scare us with atmosphere more than anything else. I really appreciated that. Usually I despise dream sequences in horror films too, but in 'You Should Have Left' they kind of play into the story, so it is hard to get too angry at the film for having them.

There were two or three ways this film could've ended, and it picked the ending type that I was most hoping to see. It was the icing on the cake for what was already a very fine horror movie. I highly recommend checking this one out.
